

Special Agreement For Taking CISC 220 and CISC 330 Concurrently

Students who are permitted to take CISC 220 and CISC 330 during the same semester (and in the same time slot) must understand and accept the following:

- When you miss a lecture in one of these classes in order to attend the other one, it is your responsibility to make up the missed material through individual study.
- The CISC 220 instructor plans to video most of the lectures, but there are occasional technical difficulties that get in the way of a video and the videos won't include the blackboard.
- When you are missing lectures from either class it is particularly important that you stay current with the OnQ area for that course, especially the news and forums.
- The fact that you are taking these two courses concurrently will not entitle you to extensions on assignments, individual tutoring, or any other special treatment. You are welcome to come to scheduled office hours to ask for help with either course, just like any other student.
- You must write the CISC 220 quizzes at the same time and place as the rest of the CISC students and make up the work you miss on those days from CISC 330.
